A bold attempt at levying blackmail was made upon A. B. Smith, cashier of the Merchants national bank, yesterday fore-anticipated, however, and the two fellows are now playing checkers with their noses. Shortly after the bank opened yesterday morning two men entered the bank and inquired for Mr Smith. They was shown that he took two leaves out of a note book, which he handed Mr Smith. One of them contained some notes in pencil, the other being written in ink and evidently transcribed in full from the readil note.

Dave Maben of Fort Worth Stands Up Before John Williams of Dallas Ten Rounds and Takes the Boodle. Events for the Fourth.

A Match Between Hollis and Smith-Arrangements have been perfected for a glove contest at Wade's theater between Tony Hollis, colored, of Austin and William Smith of Tyler. The terms of the match are that the contest shall be ten rounds for $50 a side and 75 per cent of the gate receipts, the match to occur on Saturday evening, July 4.

A Match Friday Night.

A glove contest will probably take place on Friday night at Clark's boxing academy, in which Bob Ahearn, a local light-weight, proposes to best Jimmy Brown, "the Gai-veston spider," or Tommy Dumas. Ahearn says he can best either man hands down, and is anxious to get a match on. It is probable that either Brown or Dumas will make a match with Ahearn for $50 and the

AFTER TEN ROUN CS.

Maben of Fort Worth, a Bantam-weight Wins the Fight.

A spirited ten round contest, with eight ounce gloves, occurred last night at Wade's theater, between J. H. Williams, a 117 pound man from Dallas, and Dave Mabry, a bantam-weight of this city, weight 107 pounds. The match was made three days ago, and the terms were that Williams should knock Mahen out in ten rounds, the winner to take the purse of $75 and 75 per cent of the gate receipts.
Jim Brown, "the Galveston Spider." seconded Maben, and John Hall looked after Williams.

About 150 sports were present and opinion was divided as to the result, the opinion of cunning ones, however, being that Maben would stay the requisite number of rounds. Williams had much the advantage in weight and reach, but failed to follow up advantages when gotten. Maben was shifty on his feet and to this and to his clover ducking he owes his escape from clever ducking he owes his escape from innumerable vicious leads of the Dallas

The first two rounds were consumed in ght sparring for openings, and the attempts f each to gauge the other. Williams made everal leads with his left, but was either ducked or gotten away from.
Third round—Williams tried for Maben's face, but led short and the latter landed a light one on his chest. Williams then tried for the fittle man's neck, but was again short. Some light interchanges then followed and Willam's landed sharply on Maben's face, who at-tempted to return the compliment, but played short. The round closed with the Fourth round—Williams commenced on the aggressive and rushed Maben to the ropes, but was unable to do anything se-rious on account of Maben's clever dodging. He repeatedly tried to get in body blows on the Fort Worth man but the latter was too light on his feet and got away by a scratch each time. The round closed with Williams giving Maben a rib-rounter.

Pifth round—Williams was still on the aggressive, and it was plain his plan was to play for Maben's wind. He made a round-arm sweep that fell short only about an inch. The force of the blow turned Williams lear around, and Maben put in the time on he back of Williams' neck. A light ex-hange of blows and sparring for wind con-change of blows and sparring for wind con-sumed the remainder of this round.

Sixth round.—The sparring in this round was lively, and some rapid and heavy leads were made by both men. Williams again commenced by trying for his man's wind, and met with no better success. Maben then returned the compliment and led for Williams' neck and landed lightly, get-ting away in plenty of time to avoid one of Williams' right-hand swings, with which he was trying hard to land a knock-out blow. was trying hard to land a knock-out blow. was trying hard to land a knock-out blow.

Seventh round.—Maben was still on the defensive, and would give Williams no chance to land on his wind, for which he continually led. Williams then feinted with his right. Maben dedged eleverly, and then Williams found Maben's marth with his light. found Maben's mouth with his left. Some futile sparring then followed, when Williams again endeavored to land. He succeeded in getting in some light body blows, which Maben generally returned. During the latter part of the round Maben did some ceedingly clever ducking, whereby he olded some swinging full-arm blows that the have ended disastrously. Eighth round-Williams started in to rush his man and Maben went to his knees to avoid a vicious righthander. The rest of the round was characterized by hammer and tongs work in which both men landed heavily on the body. Williams succeeded in finding Maben's chin and followed this up with a hard one-intended for the little man's wind. He, however, weni down to avoid it and the ound closed. Ninth round-Williams only had two more rounds in which to fix his man, who was now to all appearances as Iresh as he was when he began. He rushed Maben, but the latter was handy on his feet and kept away, knowing that this was best for him. Williams repeatedly lunged at his wind with his right, and repeatedly fell short. He then succeeded in landing on Maben's nose and got the first blood of the match, but only in small quantities. Williams landed lightly on Maben's neck and was countered on the cheek. The round clased with Maben's punching the back of Williams' head before the latter could Tenth round,—Maben came up confident and smiling and Williams had been receiving counsel from his second. The latter feinted with his left for Maben's face and swung his right for his wind but Maben was away in plenty of time. He then countered on Williams' neck. A fast interchange of short arm blows then followed and the men clinched. In the break away Williams tried again for his man's wind, and the the was quickly up again and succeeded in touching Williams' mouth lightly. Another clinch followed and as the men broke away time was The referce declared Maben the winner Williams failing to knock him out in agreed number, ten rounds.

Taylor, as owner of the Fort Worth dry goods company, will also probably be made a defendant in the suit, which is for the sum of $15,000. sum of $15,000.

The causes which led to the filing of the suit are these: On Tuesday last two boil-of silk were missed from the silk depart ment of the Fort Worth dry goods pany. Mr. Collier himself reported loss, and it seems suspicion fell upon Mr. Cason, the manager, a day or two later in conversation with another employe in-quired if he knew anything of Collier. The young man said he had been rooming with him for a week, and only had such an ac-quaintance with him as running with him that long would warrant. Mr. Cason then inquired whether or not he kept his trunk locked, and added that he thought if he could gain an entrance into it he would be able to find the missing goods. morning two men entered the bank and inquired for Mr. Smith. They were shown to his compartment behind the railing, and one of them, who afterward gave the name of Harry Chapman, said:

"We would like to see you privately for a few moments: This place is rather public."

"It is private enough for me," said Mr. Smith. "especially in talking to strangers."

"Well," said Chapman, "we have been watching you and this is the result." With that he took two leaves out of a note book.
